MANAGER'S COMMENTS

November 2025 (November) presented itself as a volatile month for global and local equity markets. The United States (US) equity market delivered diverging results: the Dow Jones and Standard & Poor (S&P) 500 saw modest gains, rising by 0.32% and 0.13%, respectively, while the NASDAQ slipped by 1.51%. Despite the longest US government shutdown ending in the middle of the month, market uncertainties persisted, driven by concerns over potential monetary easing and the sky-high expectations surrounding the Artificial Intelligence (AI) ecosystem which weighed on sentiment. In Europe, the STOXX 600 edged up slightly by 0.59%, supported by strong earnings in the Information Technology (IT) and Financials sectors. Japan's Nikkei 225 index plunged significantly by 4.12%, primarily due to the rising geopolitical tensions between Japan and China over the Taiwan issue. On the other hand, Chinese equities slipped despite a series of stimulus packages announced by the Beijing government, as investors increasingly focused on fiscal and structural headwinds; the Hang Seng Index, the Shanghai Composite Index, and the Shenzhen Composite Index declined by 0.18%, 1.67%, and 2.22%, respectively. On the local front, Malaysia's equity indices plummeted. The Financial Times Stock Exchange Bursa Malaysia Kuala Lumpur Composite Index (FBM KLCI), FBM EMAS, FBM EMAS Shariah and FBM Small Cap Shariah indices slipped by 0.29%, 0.89%, 2.04% and 6.20% respectively. This decline was attributed to persistent profit-taking, a weak sentiment stemming from the expected slowing pace of US Federal Reserve (the Fed) rate cuts, and continued selling by foreign investors, which collectively dampened regional appetite. Overall trading volume increased marginally by 0.23% from the previous month. Crude oil prices fell 2.87% to US Dollar (USD) 63.20 per barrel in November, due to elevated global supplies and slowing demand growth amid economic and trade concerns, coupled with the easing of geopolitical risks in the Middle East. In contrast, gold prices climbed 5.55% on heightened safe-haven demand due to persistent economic headwinds. Crude Palm Oil (CPO) prices declined by 2.21% on the back of higher inventory levels and easing demand. The Malaysian Ringgit appreciated by 1.33% against the US dollar, closing at RM 4.1328 at the end of November.

The release of delayed US economic data in November has helped restore some clarity on growth and inflation trends, though uncertainty around the Federal Reserve's easing trajectory remains a key focus for investors. Recent volatility in AI-related equities has also prompted a reassessment of whether earnings expectations can keep pace with elevated valuations. Globally, geopolitical tensions in East Asia and the muted reaction to China's latest stimulus measures continue to weigh on sentiment, but these concerns appear largely sentiment-driven. As data visibility improves and US policy signals become clearer, we expect near-term volatility to ease. Ultimately, we remain constructive heading into December and the new year, with Emerging Markets poised to benefit from stabilizing macro conditions and a gradual recovery in risk appetite.
