MANAGER'S COMMENTS

United States (US) equities diverged in September 2026 (September) as Middle East geopolitical tensions, Strait of Hormuz supply disruptions, and a surge in Brent crude oil altered monetary policy expectations toward a higher rate trajectory. The Dow Jones Industrial Average and Standard & Poor (S&P) 500 fell 4.29% and 0.45% respectively on macroeconomic headwinds in cyclical sectors. Conversely, the tech-heavy Nasdaq Composite rose 1.86%, driven by sustained AI infrastructure allocations. European equities dropped, with the Stoxx Europe 600 down 2.49% on producer price inflation pressure. In Asia, Japan's Nikkei 225 gained 0.67% on a late semiconductor recovery, while Greater China markets experienced a broad-based contraction. Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index declined 3.73% due to lingering real estate weakness, the Shenzhen Component plunged 6.28%, and the Shanghai Composite fell 3.61% as sluggish domestic credit demand offset record-low central bank lending rates. On the domestic front, the Malaysian equity market reversed its momentum. The benchmark FBM KLCI dropped 4.33% as foreign selling targeted index-heavy banking constituents. Broader market indices followed suit, with the FBM Emas and FBM Shariah indices declining 3.70% and 2.99% respectively. The FBM Small Cap Index fell by a lesser 1.28%, buffered by domestic retail participation relative to foreign-dominated blue chips, while total trading volume contracted by 8.92%. In commodities, energy markets saw extreme volatility as Brent crude surged 14.41% to USD 103.53 per barrel on maritime supply disruption risks. Gold prices fell 6.55% to USD 4,155.60 per ounce, and crude palm oil dropped 5.80% to RM 4,610 per tonne. Meanwhile, the Malaysian Ringgit depreciated 1.37% against the greenback to RM 4.0798.

Heading into the final quarter of 2026, global markets face elevated energy costs, sticky inflation, and shifting monetary expectations as Brent crude surges past 100 US dollars per barrel amid Strait of Hormuz supply disruptions. Upcoming United States CPI releases and the late October Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting remain key focal points for interest rate direction. While dollar strength drives foreign capital out of emerging markets, long term structural value across ASEAN remains compelling. In regional markets, Greater China stands out as a key beneficiary of localized property stimulus, expanding renminbi infrastructure, and rotational inflows from crowded North Asian technology trades. Across broader regional hubs, expanding digital infrastructure and defensive utility yields anchor performance. In Malaysia, Budget 2027 reinforced infrastructure execution via a 459.8 billion Ringgit spending plan, complemented by strong domestic catalysts like regional data centre expansions and consistent public project rollouts. Moving forward, generating alpha requires strict discipline and a focus on fundamental earnings visibility. Market volatility presents opportunities to evaluate quality companies with strong balance sheets, pricing power to navigate input cost inflation, and direct exposure to resilient structural themes.
